Diversity at Berlinale

Ever since its foundation in 1951, the exploration of the multivoicedness and diversity of society has been a defining element of the Berlin International Film Festival's identity. Art and culture always engage themselves in both contemporary aesthetic and social issues - a phenomenon reflected in the film programmes of the different sections and in the initiatives of the Berlinale each year.

As an international cultural event, we are a forum where questions and ideas are heard and discussed. This includes, for instance, illuminating and embracing the perspectives and life realities of underrepresented groups (e.g., in relation to gender, ethnicity, local affiliation, age, disability, sexual identity, cis- and trans-identity, religion).

The Panorama section has long been committed to queer cinema and initiated the TEDDY, a gay-lesbian film prize, in 1987. Since then it has been awarded annually to films from any of the Berlinale sections. And since the Berlinale 2013, the NATIVE special series has been devoted to cinematic storytelling of Indigenous peoples worldwide.

In addition, by supporting filmmakers and their projects, the Berlinale Talents, Berlinale Co-Production Market, and World Cinema Fund initiatives proactively and structurally advocate diversity in the film industry.

Striving to see the world from different points-of-view, Berlinale Talents reflects and practises the great social experiment of the globalised world, but one with open borders and a strong communal structure. Hailing from 81 countries, the 250 outstanding film professionals participating in Berlinale Talents this year (among them 128 women and 122 men) bring a staggering diversity of perspectives and identities to the table. Through its very structure and topics raised, the initiative sees itself as an innovation lab for the global film industries and invites the audience to explore questions of diversity and respect.

Since it was launched in October 2004 on the initiative of the Berlinale and the German Federal Cultural Foundation, the Berlinale World Cinema Fund (WCF) has been committed to the development and support of cinema in regions with a weak filmmaking infrastructure, as well as to cultural diversity in German cinemas. The WCF is a film funding project with a distinct cultural, artistic and innovative profile that has been successful in fostering international cooperation. Of course, it has played an economic role. To explore all topics related to cultural diversity as well as films and projects developed outside a Eurocentric and exotic perspective is an integral component of the WCF's concept and core programme. Diversity is a part of the WCF's DNA.

As a market, the European Film Market (EFM) not only follows developments but is also a platform for calling attention to trends and promoting visions of the future. Within this context, the EFM has set itself the goal of researching the market relevance of diversity from a global, European, and German perspective. Accordingly, the EFM examines diversity as a corporate strategy. In other words, to what extent should diversity be integrated into decision-making processes, into considerations of personnel and curatorial matters in a cultural industry such as film? How do we want to do our share in making the film industry reflect audiences more and in the broadest sense, as well as promote the making of films that portray a more diverse and inclusive world?

With these events at this year's Berlin International Film Festival, we would also like to contribute to systemic change within the industry. During the Berlinale 2018, the following events will be held on the topic of diversity:

Time's up! In the wake of a (hopefully) permanently changed perception of women (in the film industry), we want to tackle the next area: how our system's lack of accountability and hostile work environments often exclude mothers - and other carers. Gender imbalance only gets worse when motherhood comes into play. Why is it so difficult to have a sustainable career in our industry and take care of children? We want to talk about ways toward a more inclusive hiring policy and a more considerate work environment.

Admission is for accredited visitors only.
